MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRPERSON

Dear Readers,

It is with great joy and pride that I present to you the latest edition of the MAGLAW Student Journal, which this year explores the timely and transformative theme of Artificial Intelligence in the Field of Law. As we embrace this thought-provoking subject, we do so not only with academic curiosity but with a firm recognition of the seismic shifts AI is causing across the legal landscape.

Law, at its heart, is a reflection of societal values, and it must evolve with changing times. In this digital age, where algorithms and automated systems are becoming embedded in governance, decision-making, and dispute resolution, the law is being called upon to adapt swiftly. This edition of MAGLAW captures that spirit of evolution, critical inquiry, and innovation that legal scholarship must now embody.

The MAGLAW Student Journal continues to provide a platform where legal minds can express nuanced arguments, challenge norms, and imagine new possibilities. The articles in this issue mirror the immense potential that the authors possess to navigate the intersection of law and technology with maturity and vision.

I would like to thank the editorial team for their sincere efforts and the authors for their thoughtful contributions. This journal is a testament to your hard work, intellectual courage, and commitment to academic excellence.

As you delve into these pages, may you find not just information, but insight. May this issue provoke discussions, inspire new research, and broaden your understanding of what the future of law may look like in the age of artificial intelligence.

With warm regards,

Prof. (Dr.) Vandana Arora
Chairperson – Department of Laws
Patron-in-Chief, MAGLAW

MESSAGE FROM THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Dear Contributors and Readers,

It is with immense pride that we unveil this year's edition of the MAGLAW Student Journal, which boldly engages with the theme Artificial Intelligence in the Field of Law. At a time when the very foundations of legal reasoning, due process, and judicial discretion are being questioned and redefined by machine intelligence, the need for thoughtful legal scholarship is more urgent than ever.

This issue is a celebration of human curiosity and of minds that dare to ask how AI can be harnessed ethically, regulated wisely, and used meaningfully in the practice of law. From automated legal research tools to predictive analytics in sentencing, our contributors have examined the promise and perils of AI with rigor and balance.

As Editor-in-Chief, I feel a deep responsibility to advocate for ethical integrity in all scholarly pursuits. In an age where information can be generated at the click of a button, the true worth of academic work lies in its originality, reflection, and purpose. Artificial intelligence may assist us, but it is our human insight and our values, empathy, and analytical depth that must remain at the helm.

Let this issue serve not only as a record of legal thought but as a call to action for law students, practitioners, and scholars: to engage critically with technology, to protect the essence of justice, and to ensure that innovation does not outpace our collective conscience.

Thank you to the authors, reviewers, and editors who have poured dedication into this edition. Your work contributes to a broader, necessary conversation, one that will shape the legal systems of tomorrow.

Warmly,

Prof. Shipra Gupta
Editor-in-Chief
MAGLAW Student Journal
Department of Laws, Panjab University

MESSAGE FROM THE STUDENT EDITORS

Raja V. Sharma   Rutuja Kulkarni   Kashish K. Soi   Tejswi Kamble

"Innovation without integrity leads to disruption without direction."

Dear Readers,

With great excitement, we welcome you to this year's edition of the MAGLAW Student Journal. As student editors, we are proud to present a volume that probes deeply into one of the most fascinating and complex developments in modern jurisprudence and the rise of artificial intelligence in the legal domain.

From Generated Contracts to AI-assisted Drafts, the contributions in this issue reflect a wide array of perspectives on how technology is reshaping both the letter and the spirit of the law. It has been both a challenge and a privilege to curate this body of work, and we are inspired by the clarity, depth, and creativity with which our peers have engaged with this theme.

This issue stands not only as an academic compilation but as a reminder that the future of law is being written right now, in classrooms, journals and courtrooms. As students of law, we bear the unique responsibility of shaping that future with both imagination and accountability.

We express our sincere gratitude to the faculty advisors, peer reviewers, and every contributor who helped bring this edition to life. Your passion continues to keep MAGLAW a vibrant forum for legal exploration.

Happy reading, and may this journal spark curiosity, challenge perspectives, and deepen your appreciation for the evolving role of law in a tech-driven world.

With sincere thanks,

Student Editors
MAGLAW Student Journal
Department of Laws, Panjab University